About the Lee County

Extension Service

The Lee County Extension Service is part of a publicly funded statewide educational network that links the expertise and resources of federal, state and local partners.

Its mission is to help people, businesses and government leaders improve the quality of their lives through education and scientific knowledge focused on issues and needs.

Founded in 1922, the Lee County Extension Service enjoys partnerships with the University of Florida and its Institute of Food and Agricultural Sciences (IFAS). Both are nationally recognized for their research and education capabilities.

The Lee County Board of County Commissioners also plays a vital role in both funding and providing support with the office.

The Lee County Extension Service employs 14 people dedicated to serving the educational and research needs of area residents. In addition, more than 200 volunteers annually devote more than 145,000 hours to the Extension Service programs. The agency is assisted by an Advisory Committee which provides guidance in determining future program needs and develops long-range plans.

Through the combined efforts of the staff, volunteers, Advisory Committee, and the University of Florida, the Lee County Extension Service strives always to remain responsive to the needs of area residents and take a leadership role in disseminating the latest technological information.
